Grant Line 99 Interchange Named Interchange Project of the Year

Elk Grove, CA – The Grant Line 99 Interchange Project has been named Interchange Project of the Year by the California Transportation Foundation, a statewide nonprofit organization representing California's transportation community.

The California Transportation Foundation announced the TRANNY Award winners at the annual awards ceremony today at the Sacramento Convention Center.

"It was an honor to receive the Interchange Project of the Year designation. Congratulations to everyone who contributed to making this monumental project a reality," said Mayor Pat Hume. "As one who uses this interchange frequently, the real winners are everyone who now has a safer and more efficient way to get where they need to be."

The Grant Line Interchange Project, an $83 million capital improvement project funded 100 percent by local dollars, replaced one of the oldest interchanges on Highway 99. It is the first project to be constructed in the New Measure A transportation sales tax program. The new six-lane interchange now provides safer freeway access, improves local and regional traffic flow, and serves as an economic development asset for existing and future businesses in the southern part of the City.

The California Transportation Foundation is a nonprofit public benefit corporation in California that has provided support to California's transportation community since 1988.
